Description

DOLA-DLG Regional Managers can provide a wide variety of tailored leadership trainings for elected, appointed and non-profit officials. The DOLA-DLG Regional Managers have years of professional management experience in both the private and public sectors, coupled with leadership training course work that allows them to provide current, topical and relevant methodologies to improve organizational and individual leadership characteristics. Previous training sessions have included roles and responsibilities training for newly elected officials and communication training and techniques to enhance active listening skills and the basics on the establishment of developing public policy.

How to use the information

This training is tailored to identify strengths and weaknesses within an organization and its personnel. The applicant and the DOLA-DLG Regional Manager together prepare a targeted curriculum to recognize, address and improve the leadership capability of the organization. Training techniques will vary from lectures to discussions and exercises, depending on the desired outcomes.

Why this is important

Leadership training is essential to the growth of the organizational and managerial capability of today's 21st century public organizations. A constant examination of the processes and procedures of an organization, measured against the defined missions and visions in an open and transparent fashion will allow for the continued and relevant engagement of the organization in addressing today's and tomorrow's issues.
