Honeyville Honey Farm recalls its Honeyville Honey Barbecue Sauce

Allergy alert on undeclared anchovies in the sauce

DENVER— Honeyville Honey Farm of Durango is recalling bottles of Honeyville Honey Barbecue Sauce manufactured after August 1, 2011, because it may contain undeclared fish, as anchovies in the Worchestershire sauce, used in production. People who have allergies to fish are at risk of serious or life threatening allergic reaction if they consume this product. No illnesses have been reported in connection with this product.

The recalled Honeyville Honey Barbecue Sauce was distributed through retail Internet sales and in retail stores from August 1, 2011 to May 21, 2012. The firm is in the process of notifying all retail and wholesale customers of the recall. The affected product was available only in 15 oz. bottles with a UPC code of 0-3880171212-9. The affected product does not have an added sticker listing the Worcestershire sauce ingredients which includes the anchovies.

The recall was initiated after an onsite FDA inspection on May 21 that revealed anchovies were contained in the Worcestershire sauce used in production, and finished product labeling did not list the presence of anchovies.

Consumers who have purchased the Honey Barbecue Sauce and have an allergy to fish should not consume the product. Consumers who purchased the product are urged to return it to their place of purchase or discard it immediately. Consumers with any questions should contact Honeyville at 800-676-7690 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. MST or info@honeyvillecolorado.com.
