Description

The Community Development Office can assist communities in identifying trends and finding examples of plans, policies, and regulations from others around the state. The CDO staff is experienced in research and analysis methodologies to help local governments find solutions to very basic to complex problems related to land use or economic and community development.

How to use the information

Requests for research and technical assistance should be directed to the CDO staff directly. Visit the CDO website for additional contact information at www.dola.colorado.gov/cdo.

Why this is important

The CDO staff are qualified professionals with experience in research, documentation, and analysis. Communities benefit from this service by saving time and avoiding "reinventing the wheel". Because we work all over the state, CDO typically has a good grasp as to what is happening in Colorado related to land use and community development. Our expansive list of partner agencies give CDO quick access to data and other research materials relevant to local governments.
