

Required Document Matrix

For individuals who cannot demonstrate lawful presence in the U.S. or for individuals who can demonstrate temporary lawful presence in the U.S.

Non-lawfully present individuals must prove their full legal name, identity, date of birth, residency and document their Individual Taxpayer Identification Number (ITIN) issued by the Internal Revenue Service.

Temporary lawfully present individuals must prove their full legal name, identity, date of birth, residency and temporary lawful presence.

The chart below shows the documents that may be used to prove each of the elements needed to apply for a driver license, identification card, or instruction permit. In some cases, a single document may prove all elements; however, it may be necessary for some applicants to provide multiple documents. All documents presented must be an original certified by the issuing agency, an amended original document certified by the issuing agency, or a true copy certified by the issuing agency, excluding miniature, wallet sized, or photocopied documents.

All temporary lawful present applicants who do not hold a valid Colorado driver license, identification card, or instruction permit, or those whose current address does not match the address on their valid Colorado driver license, identification card, or instruction permit must also document their current residential address which includes a street address except as provided in 1 CCR 204-30, Rule 1. A parent's current address indicated on the parent's valid driver license, instruction permit, or identification card is acceptable for a minor child under 21 years old. See reverse for a list of acceptable address documents.

If you cannot prove each of the required elements with the documents listed in the chart below, you may request to go through Exceptions Processing at the time of your application in an effort to prove the required elements with additional/alternative documents.
