

Chad Abresch, MEd is the Executive Director of CityMatCH, a national organization dedicated to improving the health of women, children, families and communities. As Executive Director, he has focused the organization on three priorities—promoting health equity, effectively using science for public health practice and cultivating great leaders for the public’s health.

During his time at CityMatCH, Mr. Abresch has received several personal awards, yet is most honored by those he has accepted on behalf of the organization—the Director’s Award presented by the Maternal and Child Health Bureau and the Martha May Eliot Award for Effective Practice presented by the American Public Health Association.

In addition to his public health work, Mr. Abresch also has a wealth of experience in non-profit mission and management beginning with his graduate thesis and including the start-up of a state-wide (NE) 501(c) 3. Mr. Abresch was previously employed by the Wellness Councils of America as Senior Staff Writer, where he authored a wide variety of corporate health promotion literature, and the Gallup Organization, where he won the Gallup U.S. Interviewer Award. He enjoys life in Omaha, NE with his wife Melissa and their four young children.
